hip Reading. It is marvelous to see the perfection which some people who have become deaf in middle life attain in lip read-ing. It is something that can be learned by oneself after the first few lessons.

A hand glass is all that is necessary for the regular study, and every person met furnishes practice. Like all study, it requires perservance to become an adept, but the reward is so great in this case that it is worth working for even if one that it is worth working for even it due is not deaf. Soon we may appreciate the advantages of being able to speak to a person silently and from a distance and to receive what is said to us without depending on the easily confused car. Soon lip reading may become a fad, and any one who wishes to be accomplished in this way while it is a rarity would better begin at once. Parents with chil dren of defective hearing are almost inexcusable if they neglect having such children taught lip reading while it is saxily learned.—Newport News. "Oh!" she exciaimed as she entered the police station in a state of great anxiety. "you will help me, won't you!"
